Overview

With organizations increasingly dependent on technology and data, internal auditors are expected to understand and evaluate IT-related risks like never before. The boundaries between business and technology assurance are disappearing — and the modern auditor must now navigate IT controls, cybersecurity, and even AI-driven processes with confidence.

This highly engaging program is designed specifically for non-IT internal auditors who want to strengthen their understanding of IT audit through practical checkpoints — without getting lost in technical jargon.

Delivered in a practical, interactive format, this workshop bridges the gap between traditional internal audit and IT Audit— helping participants gain immediate, actionable insights they can apply in their organizations.

Key Learning Objectives

Apply a set of practical IT audit checkpoints (IAC) that can be used by non-IT auditors to generate meaningful findings and insights.

Learn how to interpret IT outputs, reports, and data flows to uncover exceptions and areas of focus.

Recognize and evaluate cybersecurity and data governance risks using practical audit checkpoints.

Discover how AI, automation, and emerging technologies are changing the audit function — and how non-IT auditors can adapt.

Develop the confidence to collaborate with IT and data teams, ask the right questions, and challenge assumptions during audits.
